Evaluative Foreword

Greek Personal Names provides the reader with essential information about Greek names in a manner that is easily understood by the non-Greek speaker. The article is divided into two parts: Part I provides background information on the number of Greek speakers and recent transformations of the language. Part II focuses more exclusively on Modern Greek names.

Part I (The Greek Language), provides background information to the Greek language. It identifies the number of speakers of the Greek language dating back to 1959 as well as important changes within the language. (According to Eurostat, Greece's population has grown to 11,047,000 in 2004.) More importantly, though, there is a description of the conflict between καθαρεύουσα (katharevousa) and δημοτική (dimotiki), the so-called 'γλωσσικό ζήτημα' ('language question'). The Greek government solved this conflict when in 1976 it voted dimotiki as the official written and spoken language of Greece. In 1982, the monotonic system, which uses a single accent, was officially substituted for the polytonic system with its multiple accents.

Part II accurately and precisely describes the structure of Greek names and the tradition of name-giving in Modern Greece. Here as elsewhere, the examples are numerous and illustrative. For instance, the description correctly notes that children receive their grandparents' names, although recently there has been a tendency of giving fashionable names to Greek children, such as Ariadne, Daphne, Maria Nefeli (Nefeli is also popular by itself) for girls and Alexandros, Konstantinos, Iason, Phoebus for boys. Another interesting point in Greek names is that women no longer officially change their surname after marriage (as of 1983). Husband and wife preserve their respective surnames after marriage; only for social reasons do couples change their surnames and adopt their husband's/wife's surname or add their husband's/wife's surname to their own. For example, on the ID-card of a married Greek woman, one can find her husband's first and last name together with her parents' first names. In a Greek passport, only the father's first name is added to her first name and maiden surname. In the case of an adopted child (as of 1983), the child can - when it reaches the age of majority (age 18) - add his own family name to his adopted surname. If one of the two names is a double name, the first part of it will be used so to avoid that the child has more than two surnames. This is also true for a natural child: it cannot carry more than a double surname. Appendix G deals with the given names and the titles of courtesy, nobility and the military titles. They are correct and with a large number of examples.

In my opinion, the study "Greek Personal Names" is precise and well-documented. I would suggest that some new references be added, especially about the years 1976 (declaration of dimotiki as the official language), 1982 (introduction of monotonic system) and 1983 (legal information about name giving in the Greek civil code). (The indicative references below may prove helpful.) However, beyond these few criticisms, I feel that this report has done an excellent introductory job in understanding Greek names.

Footnotes in the original manuscript are indicated as regular footnotes. Editors' notes, footnotes, corrections and additions for this republication are indicated thus: {bows, curly brackets, or braces}.

Part I. The Greek Language

A. Scope

At least 95 percent of the people of Greece (8,258,00, UN estimate of 1959) use Modern Greek as their mother tongue. It is the official language of Greece and also one of the official languages of the Republic of Cyprus. About 80 percent of the estimated 558,000 people of Cyprus speak the language. Minority groups in the United States, various countries of the Near East and Africa, and elsewhere speak Greek. The Greek-speaking community in Turkey, especially around Istanbul, is the largest in the Near East. There is a Greek community in Egypt, notably in Alexandria and also in Cairo. In lesser numbers, Greek speakers are found in Lebanon, Syria, the Sudan, the Congo area, and elsewhere.

B. Description

Before 1976: Two types of language used in modern Greece are often distinguished as the “pure” or “puristic” (καθαρεύουσα – katharevousa) and the “popular” (δημοτική – dimotiki). The puristic is the official language. It is used in Parliament, the courts, and the church and for some formal writing as well as for official communications. The popular is the language of everyday speech and usage among the majority of people. Unlike the puristic form, the popular idiom retains many foreign words that have been drawn during the course of later Greek history from Latin, the Romance languages, the Slav languages, Albanian, and most of all from Turkish, including some of its Arabic and Persian loanwords.

To call these two idioms separate “languages” is to overlook the trend of present day usage. The two forms are increasingly used in combination; for instance, both are found in the idiom used by most educated Greeks (which is called καθομιλουμένη– kathomiloumeni, meaning “spoken” language). It is reasonably accurate to state that Communist and leftist newspapers generally adhere to the popular idiom while a good many newspapers of other leanings fairly consistently use a modified puristic form, but it is also true that, in a single issue of a given newspaper, the different idioms of both may be found, depending on the individual preferences of the writers.

C. Writing, Pronunciation, and Transliteration

1. Writing

a. Alphabet

There are 24 letters in the Greek alphabet. See Footnote 1 of Appendix A, Transliteration Table for the Greek Language.

b. Use of Diacritics (until 1982)

There are three accent marks in Greek writing and printing, but only two are regularly used. The three are:

- 1) the circumflex (~) used on either of the last two syllables;
e. g., Νοῦλα (Noula), Λαδᾶς (Ladas).
- 2) the acute (´), used on one of the last three syllables; e. g., Παπαδόπουλος (Παπαδοπουλος).
- 3) the grave (`), used instead of the acute on the last syllable of a word, if the word is not followed by punctuation, e.g., Κρητικός (Kritikοs).

Note: Most Greeks have come to make no distinction between the acute and the grave but use the acute almost indiscriminately for both.

There are two aspiration marks or “breathings”— the “smooth” (´) and the “rough” (`). They in no way affect pronunciation. One of these marks is used with an initial vowel followed by a consonant or with the second of two initial vowels used as a single speech unit.

{Editor’s note: Since 1982 only the acute diacritic is used in modern Greek language (Dimotiki, or monotonic system). So, the examples have to change as well: (Νούλα (Noula), Λαδάς (Ladas).}

c. Punctuation

Greek punctuation marks are used the same as in English except that the semicolon which is represented by a high period (·) and the interrogation mark which is represented by a semicolon (;).

d. Use of Capitals

All common nouns, adjectives, and pronouns are written with small letters, except when beginning a sentence. All proper names except names of languages and adjectives of nationality have initial capitals.

2. Pronunciation

If one sees Greek names written, he can usually tell how to pronounce them, but being able to pronounce them is no guarantee of ability to spell them. This is especially true in the case of certain vowels where one sound may be used to represent as many as six Greek letters or combinations of letters. The following list shows how these vowel sounds are represented.

Sound	Greek letters	Examples	"i"
as in machine	ι, η, υ, ει, οι, υι Μίλτος (the latter rarely, if ever, encountered in personal names)	Μίτος Τέλης Σπύρος Κλειώ Οικονόμου Οικονομου	Τελίς Σπυρός Κλείο
"e" as in Fred	ε and αι	Αικατερίνη	Aikateríni
"o" as in corporal	ο and ω	Αντώνιος	Andonios

For a guide to the pronunciation of each of the Greek letters, see the Pronunciation Table presented in Appendix C.

3. Transliteration

The standard table for the transliteration of the Greek language is presented in Appendix A. Since the transliteration of Greek names is often made by those not bound by this standard, variant forms occur. The letters commonly involved in such differences are listed and illustrated in Appendix D, Variant Transliterations of Greek Letters. (In various places throughout this study, the abbreviations std. and var. are used to identify standard transliteration and variant transliteration, respectively.)

When Russian names appear in Greek texts, the Russian—Miscellaneous Foreign Languages—English Transliteration Table, Appendix B, should be used. Whenever the Russian letters are given, transliteration should be directly from Russian to English.

Part II. Greek Personal Names

A. Carding

Word order for carding Greek personal names is the same as for English.

B. Structure

1. A child's given name (X) is nearly always a grandparent's name. The first-born son often receives the paternal grandfather's name, and the first daughter often receives the maternal grandmother's name. A child is practically never named for a living parent. Two baptismal names were customary in the past, but now only one is the rule. The trend is again going to two baptismal names. This happens because many couples usually do not want more than one child (mostly for economic reasons), so they want to give both their parents' names to the child.

2. A father's family name is the surname (P) of all his children and his given name written in the genitive (possessive) case is the middle name (Mn) of all his children. (But see para. 5 below on female names after marriage.) In unofficial reference, a middle name may be omitted, represented by an initial, or otherwise abbreviated.

3. In listing names in a telephone directory or other unofficial list, a comma is not usually placed after the surname; for example,

Ioannis Georgiou ALYSSANDRATOS

X Mn P

and

Konstandina Ioannou PLESSA

X Mn P

would be listed as

ALYSSANDRATOS Ioannis (ALYSSANDRATOS Ioannis Georgiou—or G. or Geor.)

and

PLESSA Konstandina (or PLESSA Konstandina Ioannous—or I.)

4. Official records used the order of any other list but use a formal style, distinguished by the writing of the middle name in full preceded by tou (genitive case of the masculine definite article; for example,

ALYSSANDRATOS Ioannis tou Georgiou

(literally Ioannis of Georgios ALYSSANDRATOS, but understood as Ioannis ALYSSANDRATOS, son of Georgios ALYSSANDRATOS)

and

PLESSA Konstandina tou Ioannou

(similarly understood as Konstandina PLESSA, daughter of Ioannis PLESSAS)

5. Before 1983: On marriage, a woman dropped the given name of her father (genitive case) that she has had as a middle name and added the given name of her husband (also genitive case). She also dropped her father's surname and adopted her husband's using the genitive case. Thus,

Maria GeorgiouKALERGI (Maria, daughter of George KALERGIS) on marrying Ioannis SALAMOS becomes Maria Ioannou SALAMOU (Maria, wife of Ioannis SALAMOS).

X Mn P

If later divorced she would revert to her maiden name. If widowed, her name was unchanged.

Sometimes a woman, especially if prominent in her own right or a member of an illustrious family, would retain her maiden name but join her husband's surname to it, thus forming a hyphenated compound surname. Thus,

Maria KANAKI, on marrying Stavros DIAMANTOGLOU*

might use the name

Maria Stavrou KANAKI-DIAMANTOGLOU

* As evidenced by the ending -oglou, DIAMANTOGLOU is a Turkish surname that came into Greece.

A compound surname is not confined to this origin. It may involve the addition of an area or an estate name or even an adopted surname. An illustration of the last named alternative is seen in the name of the Foreign Minister, Evangelos AVEROFF-TOSITSAS. Mr AVEROFF added TOSITSAS to honor a friend of the family who died heirless and, with the name, came a considerable fortune to be used in the development of the town and area where Mr. TOSITSAS had lived.

Indexing for compound surnames is under the whole surname; for example:

KANAKI-DIAMANTOGLU, Mary Stavrou /Mrs./
AVEROFF-TOSITSAS, Evangelos /Mr./

{Editorial note: Another interesting point in Greek names is that women no longer officially change their surname after marriage (as from 1983). Husband and wife preserve their respective surnames after marriage; only for social reasons do couples change their surnames and adopt their husband's/wife's surname or add their husband's/wife's surname to their own. For example, on the ID-card of a married Greek woman, one can find her husband's first and last name together with her parents' first names. In a Greek passport, only the father's first name is added to her first name and maiden surname.}

6. An illegitimate child uses his mother's surname, unless his father confers his name upon the child and the mother and child agree and the documents are properly notarized.

7. An adopted child takes the name of his adopter but has the privilege of adding his own family name if he so desires.

C. Surnames

Appendix E presents examples of Greek surnames transliterated into English according to the standard table in Appendix A. The following comments provide a limited analysis of the formation of Greek surnames with a few references to distinctive traits of Cypriot names.

1. Surnames and given names appearing in context rather than as signatures or as they appear in a list are inflected, as are the articles or terms of address that precede them, according to case, gender, and number. Translated (and transliterated) into English, a name is rendered in the nominative case, regardless of how it is used in the sentence. The feminine counterparts of masculine surnames ending in -OS, -AS, and -IS will be -OU, -A, and -I and feminine names reflect the difference in their English versions.

2. The majority of Greek names were patronymic names. A few were the simple genitive case of the father's given name, ending in -OU. For this reason, there are some family names identical with middle names with the same endings, but rarely do the identical forms appear in one individual's name. A very large number were formed by adding suffixes, or prefixes, or both to a given name, and a good number are descriptive words, drawn from geographic location, profession, trade, or occupation, physical qualities, or traits of character or disposition. Patronymic names formed in different ways are clearly the largest source. Illustrations of these various sources follow.

a. Surnames ending in -άδης, -ADIS and -ίδης, -IDIS (meaning "son of"), added to the given name of a man's father, are as distinctively Greek as the patronymic forms ending in -OU.

Αναστασιάδης	ANASTASIADIS
Αγγελίδης	ANGELIDIS
Κωνσταντινίδης	KONSTANDINIDIS

The same given name may have taken either of these courses on its way to becoming a surname, as the examples below show:

Γεωργίου GEORGIU	Γεωργιάδης GEORGIADIS
------------------	-----------------------

Ιωάννου IOANNOU

Ιωαννίδης IOANNIDIS

Νικολάου NIKOLAOU

Νικολαΐδης NIKOLAIDIS

b. Another type of patronymic name, now a surname, was formed by adding to the given name of one's father diminutive endings -άκης, -AKIS, -ούτσος, -OUTSOS and -πουλος, -POULOS (a very popular suffix). These suffixes developed meaning "little", "dear", then "young", and later on, "son."

Παπαδάκης PAPADAKIS

Παπαδόπουλος PAPAPOULOS

Μαρκάκης MARKAKIS

Μαρκόπουλος MARKOPOULOS

Στεφανάκης STEFANAKIS

Στεφανόπουλος STEFANOPOULOS

Ανδρούτσος ANDROUTSOS

(Names with these endings are often associated with particular geographical areas. See 3a and 3b, below.)

c. Some surnames derive from place names, often combined with suffixes such as -ιανός, -IANOS; -ικός, -IKOS; and -ίτης, -ITIS as in:

Αλατσατιανός

ALATSATIANOS (from Alatsata)

Κρητικός

KRITIKOS (from Crete)

Ζαραφωνίτης

ZARAFONITIS (from Lakonia)

d. Surnames deriving from trades, professions, and occupations often end in -άς, -AS (denoting "seller of" or "dealer in"); for example:

Βουτυράς BOUTYRAS (Butter Seller)

Κανατάς KANATAS (Potter)

Συκαράς SYKARAS (Fig Seller)

Τροχιστράς TROKHISTRAS (Grinder)

e. Nicknames of various kinds have become surnames. Some have been formed by adding a suffix or prefix meaning big (-ας, AS; -αρος, -AROS; ακας-, AKAS) or little (Κοντο-, KONTO-) to a given name, as in:

Γεωργάς GEORGAS (Big George)

Γιάνναρος GIANNAROS (Big John)

Γιαννάκας GIANNAKAS (Big John)
Κοντογιάννος KONTOGIANNOS (Little John)

Some nicknames that have been perpetuated as family names consist of descriptions of personal characteristics; for instance,

Ασπρομάτης ASPROMMATIS (“white-eyed”)
Εξαδάκτυλος EXADAKTYLOS (“six-fingered”)
Στραβόλεμος TRAVOLEMOS (“crooked-necked”) Τεσσερομάτης TESSEROMMATIS (“four-eyed”)

f. Some surnames have resulted from the prefixing to a given name of honorific prefixes such as those below.

(1) Γερο-, GERO-, from γέρος (old man) as in:

Γεροδήμος GERODIMOS
Γερονίκος GERONIKOS
Γερονόμος GERONOMOS

(2) Καλο-, or Καλλι-, KALO- or KALLI-, from καλός, kalos (good) as in:

Καλόγερος KALOGEROS
Καλλιόπουλος KALLIOPOULOS

(3) Χατζη-, KHATZI- (std.) or HATZI- (var.) from the Arabic “hajj”, i.e., one who has visited Mecca. Before a Greek surname, this prefix indicates that the bearer is a descendant of someone who has visited the Holy Land; as in Χατζηκυριάκου
KHATZIKYRIAKOU (or HATZIKYRIAKOU)

(4) Μαστρο-, MASTRO-, from μάστορης mastoris (artist or master) as in:

Μαστρογιάννης MASTROGIANNIS

Μαστρομιχάλης MASTROMIKHALIS

(5) Παπα-, PAPA, from παπάς papas (priest) as Παπακωνσταντίνου, PAPAKONSTANDINOU.

g. Other prefixes besides KHATZI- or HATZI- (above) that came into the language through Turkish (and often its Arabic and Persian loanwords) include:

1) Δελη-, DELI-, from δελής delis, referring originally to a rapidly charging Turkish cavalry soldier of the 18th century and later associated with the Greek word τρελλός, trellos, meaning crazy or a madman, as in DELIGANNIDES (literally, son of the madman, John).

2) Καρα-, KARA-, Turkish for “black” as in KARAGEORGIOS. (Cf. Μαυρο-, MAVRO-, Greek for “black”, as in MAVROGIANNIS).

h. Epithets of a religious nature are the source of yet other modern surnames, for example:

Χριστόδουλος KHRISTODOULOS (Servant of Christ)

Χριστόφιλος KHRISTOFILOS (Friend or lover of Christ)

3. Each suffix listed below may indicate that a person or one of his male ancestors was born in or came from the place or area named.

a. -ακης, -ακις - AKISS—the island of Crete.

Κατράκης KATRAKIS

Νικολακάκις NIKOLAKAKIS

Παπαδρακάκις PAPADRAKAKIS

b. -πουλος, POULOS—the Peloponnesus

Κανελλόπουλος KANELLOPOULOS

Παπαδόπουλος PAPADOPOULOS

Σπυρόπουλος SPYROPOULOS

c. -άκος, -AKOS—Sparta.

Μαυράκος MAVRAKOS

d. -έας, -EAS—around Sparta.

Μανέας MANEAS

e. -έλλης, -ELLIS—the island of Mytilini (Lesbos).

Στεφανέλλης STEFANELLIS

f. -άτος, -έτος, -ATOS, -ETOS—one of the Ionian Islands.

Νικολέτος NIKOLETOS

Στεφανάτος STEFANATOS

g. -ογλου, -OGLOU—northern northern Greece (Macedonia or Thrace) or Turkey.

Διαμαντόγλου DIAMANTOGLU

h. -λής, -LIS—Turkey.

Τσαγκλής TSANGLIS

4. Especially in Cyprus, surnames composed of the prefix Χατζη-* (KHATZI- or HATZI-) plus a given name, e.g., Χατζηκυριάκος (KHATZIKYRIAKOS or HATZIKYRIAKOS), are sometimes found used as given names.

Χατζηκυριάκος Σταυρίδης Khatzikyriakos STAVRIDIS

(or Hatzikyriakos STAVRIDIS)

Χατζησταύρος Χατζησταύρου Khatzistavros KHATZISTAVROU

(or Hatzistavros HATZISTAVROU)

5. Some Cypriot names begin with a double consonant.

Γεώργιος Ττοκαρίδης Georgios TTOKARIDIS

Θεόδωρος Κκίλου Theodoros KKILOU

6. In both Greece and Cyprus, some Greeks have the same given name and surname, the latter being in the possessive (genitive) case.

Κωνσταντίνος Κωνσταντίνου Konstandinos KONSTANDINOU

Γεώργιος Γεωργίου Georgios GEORGIU

Νικόλαος Νικολάου Nikolaus NIKOLAOU

D. Given Names

1. Appendix F presents a list of Greek given names with abbreviations and variants (which include popular or demotic forms, diminutives and other variations) with English transliterations according to the standard table (Appendix A) and, for each name, the English counterpart where there is one.

2. The endings of masculine names are so varied that generalization is not very helpful. Some common endings are -os, -as, and -is. Demotic forms are not used for every name. Feminine given names may end in -o, -a, and -i, but most of them end in -a.

Some feminine given names are counterparts of masculine given names.

Masculine	Feminine
Γεώργιος, Georgios (demotic: Γιώργος, Giorgos)	Γεωργία, Georgia
Δημήτριος, Dimitrios (demotic: Δημήτρης, Dimitris)	Δήμητρα, Dimitra
Λεωνίδας, Leonidas (no demotic form is known)	Λεωνίδα, Leonida (not often used)
Ιωάννης, Ioannis (demotic: Γιάννης, Giannis)	Ιωάννα, Ioanna

3. Many given names are the names of saints of the Greek Orthodox Church or of Biblical personages. Some are derived from ancient Greek literature and mythology.

Μιχαήλ	Mikhail (Michael)
Αβραάμ	Avraam (Abraham)
Σοφοκλής	Sofoklis (Sophocles)
Σωκράτης	Sokratis (Socrates)
Παυσανίας	Pavsanias (Pausanias)
Αγαμέμνων	Agamemnon (Agamemnon)

4. Since Greeks are sometimes named after a locally venerated patron saint, some given names suggest place of origin as in the following.

Γεράσιμος	Gerasimos, a saint venerated in Cephalonia.
Σπυρίδων	Spyridon, a saint venerated in Corfu.

5. In addition to their patronymic and geographical force when used in surnames, the diminutive suffixes still retain their diminutive or endearing meaning (“small one” or “dear one”) when used in given names. Some of these suffixes are:

-άκης (-akis), as in Γιωργάκης (Giorgakis)	from Γεώργιος (Georgios)
-άκι (-aki), as in Ελενάκι (Elenaki)	from Ελένη (Eleni)
-ούλης (oulis), as in Γεωργούλης (Georgoulis)	from Γεώργιος (Georgios)
-ούλα (-oula), as in Φωτεινούλα (Fotinoula)	from Φωτεινή (Fotini)
-ούλι (-ouli), as in Φωτεινούλι (Fotinouli)	from Φωτεινή (Fotini)
-ίτσα (-itsa), as in Ελενίτσα (Elenitsa)	from Ελένη (Eleni)

6. Some Greeks, especially in Cyprus and in the United States, prefer and often adopt the English counterpart of their given names. When working from translated names and not having knowledge of individual practices, it is a sound rule to list both the English transliteration and the English counterpart of Greek given names as illustrated in:

PAPADOPOULOS, Ioannis (John)
 STEFANOTIS, Georgios (George)

E. Titles

Presented in Appendix G. are the following lists of titles:

1. Titles used in general address (Mr., Mrs., Miss., Messrs., Mesdames, Misses)
2. Titles of nobility
3. Titles of Cabinet Ministers
4. Other governmental, organizational, and occupational titles
5. Military titles

GENERAL: This table and other tables to be issued in the future are designed to facilitate the direct conversion to the B.G.N. system of such Russian place names as appear in transliterated form in other languages. In order to achieve uniformity, it is of utmost importance that foreign transliterations from the Russian be converted to the B.G.N. system, even though the original transliteration uses the Roman alphabet. This tables gives foreign language transliterations of the Russian, which can then be directly equated to the B.G.N. system.

Δ δ as th in this	Π π as p in paper
E ε as e in Fred	Ρ ρ slightly trilled as in rose
Z ζ as z in zebra	Σ σ as s in see , but as z before
H η as i in machine	voiced consonants (β, γ, δ, μ, ν)
Θ θ as th in thin	Τ τ as t in Tom
Ι ι as i in machine	Υ υ as i in machine
Κ κ as k in king	Φ φ as f in Fred
Λ λ as l in lot	Χ χ See Note 2
Μ μ as m in Mark	Ψ ψ as ps in lips
	Ω ω as o in corporal

1. Before the front vowels (vowel sounds i and e, the “ ” resembles the consonant sound of “y” in such words as “year, yes, or yellow.” Before the back vowels (vowel sounds a, o, and ou), “ Γ ” has no equivalent sound in English. One makes it by pronouncing the English “g” but without letting the back of the tongue touch the palate.

2. Before front vowels the “X” resembles the English sound of “h” as in the word “hue.” Before back vowels the “X” resembles the English “h” in such words as “harm” or “horn,” but with more friction.

Appendix D. Variant Transliterations of Greek Letters

The Greek letters or combinations of letters for which variant transliterations are usually encountered are listed below, with both standard and variant forms and examples.

Greek	Standard Transliteration	Variant Transliteration
Β β Βασίλειος	V Vasileios	B Basileios
Γ γ Γεώργιος Gheorghios, Yeoryios	G	Gh or Y (when the Γ is followed by ε,ι,η,υ,οι,ει) Georgios
Δ δ Δήμητρα	D Dimitra	Dh (when the Δ is followed by ε,ι,η,υ,οι,ει) Dhimitra
Η η Δημητριάδης	I Dimitriadis	E Demetriades
Κ κ Καραμανλής	K Karamanlis	C Caramanlis
Φ φ Στεφανόπουλος	F Stefanopoulos	Ph Stephanopoulos
Χ χ Χριστόφορος Χαράλαμπος	Kh Khristoros Kharalambos	Ch or H Christoforos Charalambos Haralambos
Χατζηδάκης	Khatzidakis	Hatzidakis*

ΑΙ αι	Ai	E
Αικατερίνη	Aikaterini	Ekaterini
ΑΥ αυ	Av	Af (when followed by the consonants θ,κ,ξ,π,σ,τ,φ,χ,ψ),
Αυθεντόπουλος	Avthendopoulos	Afthendopoulos
ΓΚ γκ	Ng (medially)	G or Nk
Παγκράτη{ς}	Pangrati{s}	Pankrati{s}
{The original CIA text gave the feminine form Παγκράτη (Pangrati/Pankrati). Since all the other examples use the male form, we think it is appropriate to show the male form Παγκράτης (Pangratis/Pankratis) in this example as well.}
Γουγκούσης	Goungousis	Gougousis
{The way to write the name is with an 'η' and not with an 'ι'.}
ΕΙ ει	Ei	I
Αριστείδη	Aristeidis	Aristidis
ΕΥ ευ	Ev	Ef (when followed by the consonants θ,κ,ξ,π, σ,τ,φ,χ,ψ)
Ελευθέριος	Elevtherios	Eleftherios (same as in the example above)

*The X in the prefix Χατζη- (derived from an Arabic word, usually romanized as Haji) is nearly always transliterated as H; thus Hatzidakis is normally preferable to Khatzidakis.

Greek	Standard Transliteration	Variant Transliteration
ΗΥ ηυ	Iv	If (when followed by the consonants θ,κ,ξ,π,σ,τ,φ,χ,ψ) (rare in modern Greek)
ΙΑ ια Ιακωβίδης	Ia Iakovidis	Ja Jakovidis
ΙΟΥ ιου Ιουλία	Iou Ioulia	Ju Julia
ΙΩ ιω Ιωακείμ	Io Ioakeim	Jo Joachim
ΜΠ μπ Σταμπάτος Ζορμπάς	Mb (medially) Stambatos Zormbas	Mp or B Stampatos Zorbas
ΝΤ ντ Τσιγάντες Ανταλής	Nd (medially) Tsigandes Andalis	Nt or D Tsigantes Adalis
ΟΙ οι Οικονόμου	Oi Oikonomou	I or E Ikonomou Ekonomou
ΟΥ ου Ουρανία	Ou Ourania	U Urania
ΤΖ τς Τζουβάς	Tz Tzouvas Khatzipanos	Dj or Dz Djouvas Χατζηπάνος Hadzipanos

ΤΣ τς	Ts	Ch
Τσάκωνας	Tsakonas	Chakonas

{Current: Δεσποινίς (δνις) Δεσποινίδα (δίδα)}	Despoinida	Miss
Δεσποινίδες (δ/ιδες), Δεσποινίδες	Despoinides (d/ides)	Misses {

Example: (κ.κ. Γεωργίου και Νικολάου)
(k.k. GEORGIΟΥ kai NIKOLAΟΥ)
Messrs. GEORGIΟΥ and NIKOLAΟΥ)

Note: The abbreviation ε. α. (εν αποστρατεία, en apostrateia) after a title means “retired”; for example,

(Στρατηγός ε.α. Ιωάννης Καλέργης)

(Stratigos e.a. Ioannis KALERGIS)

means

General Ioannis KALERGIS, retired.

*{The current (and former) version of the plural form of Miss is Δεσποινίδες (δ/ιδες), Despoinides (d/ides). It has not changed. As a form of address, the singular form of Miss has not changed. (For example, you say: “How are you today, Miss X”. (Here Miss corresponds to Δεσποινίς (δνις), Despoinis (dnis.),) Only in sentences referring to this or that Miss X or Y the singular form changes from Δεσποινίς (δνις), to Δεσποινίδα (δίδα). (For example: “Do you know if Miss X is here today?” Here you put Δεσποινίδα (δίδα) Despoinida (dida).}

2. Titles of Nobility

The members of the royal family of Greece are referred to as follows:

{Greece no longer has a king, queen, princes, or princesses. If there were any, they would be as follows:}
